This step-by-step guide will teach you everything you need to know to get started with Sashiko embroidery. We will cover the history of Sashiko, the materials you need, and the basic stitches used in this technique.

History of Sashiko

Sashiko originated in Japan during the Edo period (1603-1868). It was originally used by farmers and fishermen to repair and reinforce their clothing. Sashiko stitches are small and dense, which makes them very strong and durable. This made them ideal for mending torn or worn clothing.

Over time, Sashiko embroidery became more decorative. People began to use it to create beautiful designs on clothing, household linens, and other textiles. Today, Sashiko is still popular in Japan and around the world.

Materials You Need

To get started with Sashiko embroidery, you will need the following materials:

- Fabric: Sashiko embroidery can be done on any type of fabric, but cotton and linen are the most popular choices. These fabrics are strong and durable, and they take the stitches well.
- Thread: Sashiko thread is a thick, cotton thread that is specially designed for this technique. It is available in a variety of colors.
- Needles: Sashiko needles are sharp and have a small eye. This makes them ideal for creating the small, dense stitches used in Sashiko embroidery.
- Scissors
- Measuring tape or ruler
- Pencil or fabric marker

Basic Stitches

There are a few basic stitches used in Sashiko embroidery. The most common stitch is the running stitch. This stitch is created by bringing the needle up through the fabric, skipping one or two threads, and then bringing it back down through the fabric. The backstitch is another common stitch used in Sashiko embroidery. This stitch is created by bringing the needle up through the fabric, skipping one thread, and then bringing it back down through the fabric in the same hole. The overcasting stitch is a third common stitch used in Sashiko embroidery. This stitch is created by bringing the needle up through the fabric, wrapping the thread around the needle, and then bringing the needle back down through the fabric.

Getting Started

To get started with Sashiko embroidery, follow these steps:

1. Choose a fabric and thread. Cotton and linen are the most popular choices for fabric, and Sashiko thread is a thick, cotton thread that is specially designed for this technique.
2. Draw a design on the fabric. You can use a pencil or fabric marker to draw your design.
3. Thread the needle. Sashiko needles have a small eye, so you will need to use a threader to thread the needle.
4. Start stitching. Bring the needle up through the fabric, skipping one or two threads. Then, bring the needle back down through the fabric. Repeat this process to create the running stitch.
5. Continue stitching until you have completed your design.
