

Treasure Hunt: The Story of the World's Longest Treasure Hunt

In 2010, Forrest Fenn, a retired art dealer and Vietnam War veteran, published a book called The Thrill of the Chase. The book contained a poem that Fenn claimed held clues to the location of a hidden treasure chest filled with gold and jewels. The chest was said to be hidden somewhere in the Rocky Mountains, and Fenn promised that the first person to find it would win the treasure.

The poem was full of riddles and puzzles, and it sparked a massive treasure hunt that lasted for over 10 years. Thousands of people from all over the world searched for the treasure, but no one could find it. Fenn eventually released additional clues, but the treasure still remained hidden.

In 2020, a man named Jack Stuef found the treasure chest. Stuef had been searching for the treasure for years, and he had finally solved the puzzle. He found the chest hidden in a remote area of the Rocky Mountains, and he claimed the prize.

The story of the treasure hunt is a fascinating one, and it has been told in a new book by journalist Ben Mezrich. Mezrich's book, also called The Thrill of the Chase, tells the story of the hunt from its inception to its eventual resolution. The book includes interviews with Fenn, Stuef, and some of the other people who searched for the treasure.

Mezrich's book is a well-written and engaging account of the world's longest treasure hunt. The book is full of adventure, suspense, and intrigue, and it is sure to appeal to anyone who enjoys a good mystery.
